Description of the programme

The study is designed as a non-teaching structured (two-stage) course with a focus on special needs education and drama therapy. The study covers not only theoretic and informative disciplines (e.g. basics of special needs education, psychology, psychopaedy, etc.), but a great emphasis is placed on formative and therapeutic-formative disciplines: drama therapy, art therapy, personal-social training, creative drama, drama therapy projecting, and other expressive and experiential subjects.

The aim of the study is to prepare the graduates for qualified work in the sectors of education, social care, health care, and in non-governmental organizations active in the mentioned sectors.

The study organically links the knowledge of special needs education and drama therapy (in the context of other expressive therapeutic disciplines), and on the basis of a broad interdisciplinary approach leads students to independent work in solving complex theoretical and especially practical issues with their clients.

The graduates have an opportunity to continue in the follow-up Master’s degree in Special Needs Education – Drama Therapy.

Graduate profile and job opportunities

The graduates will be qualified for the function of an educational worker with a focus on the application of therapeutic-formative approaches with an emphasis on paratheatrical systems (drama therapy, educational drama, theatre in education), assistant teacher, educational worker for schools and school facilities designed for institutional and protective education and preventative education – educational care centres, children’s homes, educational institutions, substitute family institutions, children’s houses, etc. The graduates will be ready for educational work and interventions in social service facilities (e.g. home for disabled persons), therapeutic communities (groups) organized by the non-profit sector, as well as educational work, interventions and organizing work in non-governmental non-profit organizations aimed at assisting persons with health disability and social handicaps.
