Description of the programme

The study is designed as a non-teaching unstructured course with a focus on physiology and communication disorders in all its forms, including hearing disorders. The field of study Speech and Language Therapy aims to prepare graduates for qualified work in the sectors of education, social care and health care, including non-governmental organizations in these sectors, and a counselling system in accordance with the amendments to the respective legal regulations and recommendations of national and international commissions and associations determining the area of tertiary education and the speech and language therapy profession.

Graduate profile and job opportunities

The graduates can work in governmental and non-governmental speech and language therapy clinical and other facilities in the health care sector, including speech and language therapy outpatient departments (independently after meeting other legal criteria defining non-medical professions in the health-care system), in educational facilities, including counselling centres (as non-teaching staff) and in social institutions (e.g. in residential social service institutions), where they can perform speech and language therapy diagnostics, provide comprehensive speech and language therapy care to individuals of all ages with impaired communication abilities, including hearing impairment, or perform specific therapy aimed at orofacial impairment. The graduates can also continue in postgraduate study of Special Needs Education and Speech and Language Therapy (e.g. abroad) or in a health care field of study of Clinical Speech and Language Therapy.

The graduates will be ready to work as special needs educators – speech and language therapists with a focus on the development and re-education of the communication system in persons with disrupted communication ability and persons with hearing impairment. They will be proficient in the diagnostics, therapy and development of individual plans in their areas of expertise. The graduates will be ready to work as speech and language therapists in the health care sector.

The graduates will be qualified to work in the sectors of education, health care and social affairs.
